High School will never be the same in Ypsi

By Joan Bush

Ypsilanti's new high school will open in September on schedule and on budget according to Ypsilanti Superintendent of schools Ray Barber.

Understandably proud of his new school, Dr. Barber took this reporter on a guided tour of the building which lasted about an hour and a half.

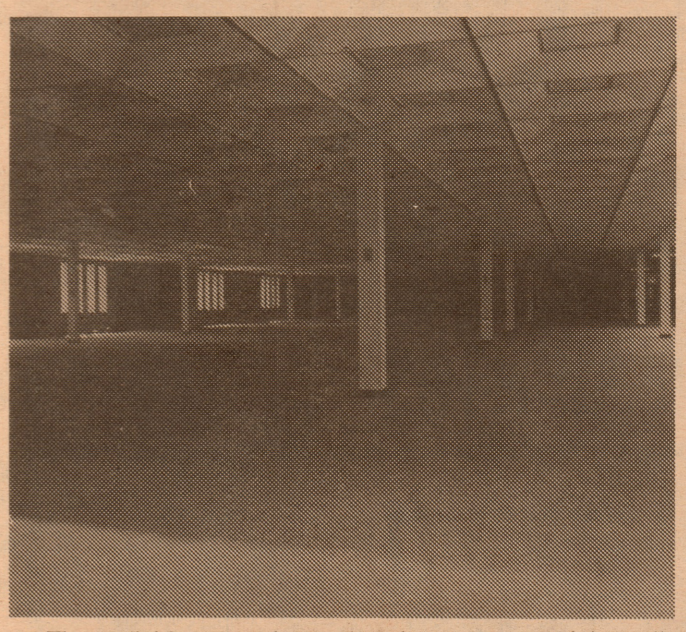
The school features interior brick walls, muted shades of tan and yellow in the classrooms and accents of bright yellow and orange. The halls and stairways are all carpeted. The building was designed to be accouxtically comfortable and as maintenance free as possible.

The carpets deaden footfalls and the colors give a feeling of serenity.

One of the unusual features of the school is the wireless communication systems installed in the ceilings of all the classrooms. Loops of wire installed in the ceilings carry sounds to the students wearing special head sets.

One of the special savings of this project is in teacher time. In a traditional shorthand class, the teacher dictates with a stop watch in hand and some students go faster than whe dictates and some go slower and for the average student, her rate is just right. With the special wireless headsets, cassets can dictate simultaneously at 90 words to the advanced student and 60 words to those who don't catch on so quickly. The teacher is free to monitor the classroom giving individualized help where it is needed.

Surrounding the Library Media Center on the second floor is a large area of open space. This area will be devoted to teaching English, social studies and humanities. The teachers may arrange their classroom size and shapes with dividers which will soon be delivered to the school.



These dividers permit regular classrooms, special small classrooms for students working on advanced or individual projects or team teaching areas.

The school size is not determined by number of classrooms, but by teaching stations--there are 101 of these in the building. Most teacher stations can be used as individual classrooms or as part of team teaching situations.

The architect, Warren Holmes of Lansing, eliminated most of the traditional school halls thus utilizing most of the 310,000 square feet. John Wall of Bryan, Ohio, is the contractor.

There are earth science labs, physical labs, and chemistry labs, each with its own small adjacent lab for advance or indiviualized work by students with special interests.

The shops--auto, soft materials and hard materials--open directly to the outside to permit easy access of materials. It is in this area where the old cars which are a part of any auto shop program will be parked. A wall hides these cars and other equipment from eyes of the passing motorists.

A small, well-equipped little theatre will delight the hearts of budding actors and actresses. The stage can be expanded by means of a thrust stage which extends over the orchestra pit.

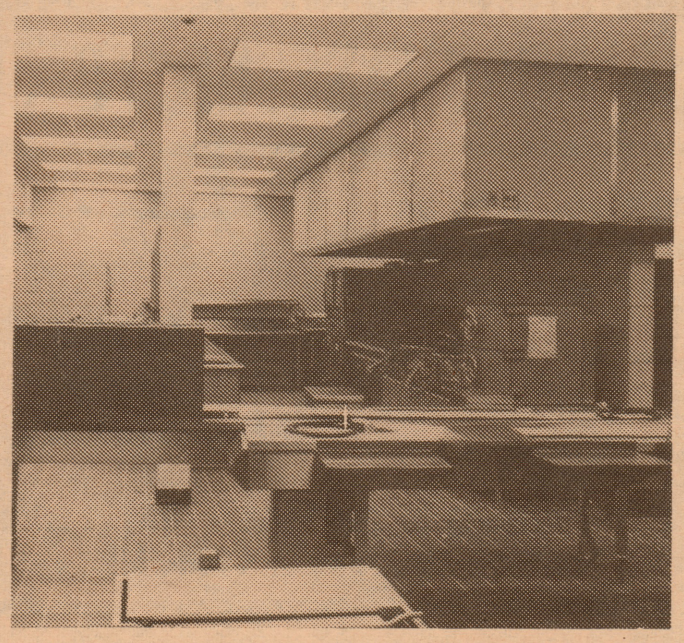
The orchestra and cast members have a large gathering area below the stage with access to both the stage and the orchestra pit. There is room for stagecraft students to construct the sets just behind the stage which eliminates moving sets throughout the building.

Nearby are the art areas. These teaching areas are designed like the rest of the building--there are no permanent dividers between different areas of art. Sliding doors open to a small patio-like area where the art and photography students may work in the open air utilizing the different lighting. This area is separated from the rest of the campus by a wall to give the students some privacy while they work.

The home economics teaching areas will be a delight to all future homemakers. The ovens are built into the wall at a convenient height and dishwashers are available to eliminate one rather unpleasant chore. Storage cabinets next to the sewing machine give easy access to supplies for the home-ec students.

The pool or natatorium features premanent starting blocks and a diving area. The locker room benches are an integral part of the lockers eliminating barked shins so typical of the free standing benches.

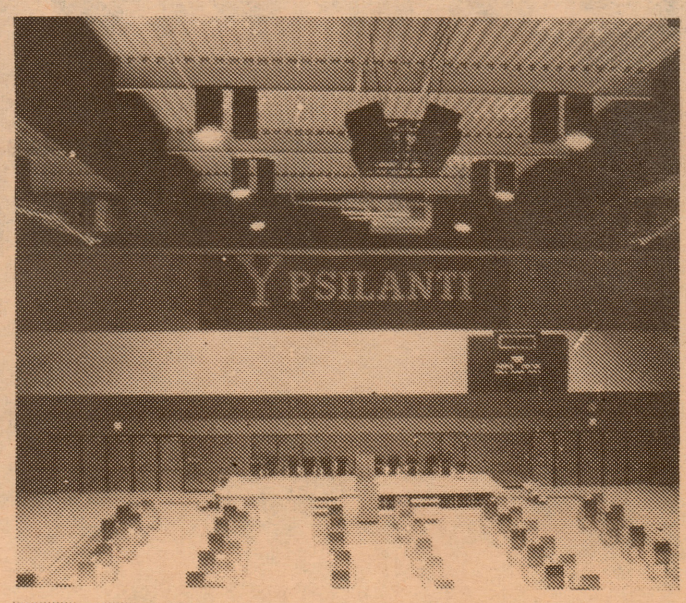
There are several gym areas. The large central gym has a tartan floor. Bleachers can be pulled out from the side on to the edges of the gym floor and can also fill the auxiliary gym areas with a balcony-like effect. The auxiliary gym areas are above the regular gym and have wooden floors. This area also has an oval track. There is also a separate wrestling room.

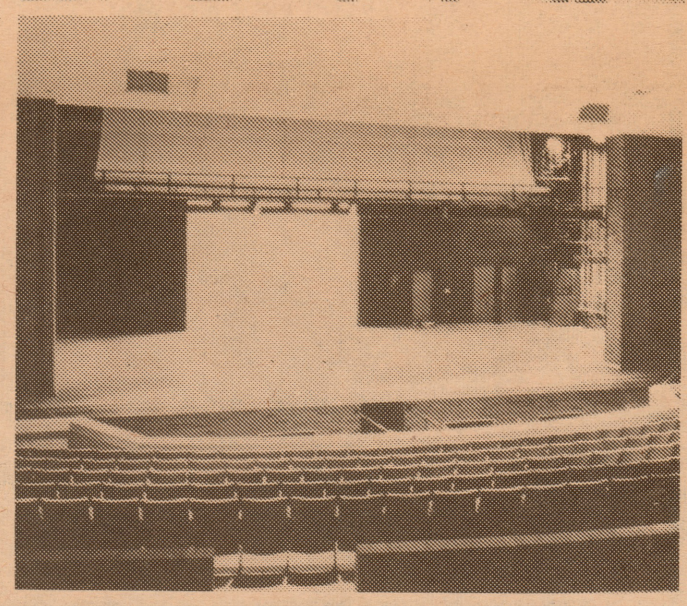


The business education area has a room, complete with sales cases, for the students interested in learning merchandising.

In the section of the school designed for the music students there are individual practice rooms, a chorus room and a band room. Special acoustical tiles are an integral part of this area.

Dr. Barker explained that the school board had purchased 225 uniforms--enough for two bands.





"The school is designed," Barber explained, "to give 100 percent use of space at all times. This compares with about 85 percent usage at any given time in the usual high school.

"Throughout the entire planning of the school, the teachers have had a lot of input. They especially requested lots of storage areas. Several of the design features are a direct result of teacher suggestions."

Everywhere you look in the school there are free standing storage areas, built-in shelves, built-in cabinets and drawers. There are storage areas for books and supplies in convenient areas throughout the school. In one area, storage shelves for books move on tracks and can be pushed tightly together thus saving aisle space and allowing more room for storage.

The lecture rooms remind one of a college facility. The auditorium can be divided into four stations to provide more lecture areas.

Special safety features are built into the biology and physics labs to wash away splattered acids.

A two-wire alarm system, similar to an electric eye, will sound an alarm at the police station.

The mechanical parts of the building can be checked out on a computer. This same mechanism also alerts the fire alarm system in case of fire.

"The school is unique in its flexibility, the acoustics, and the arrangements for the use of media such as television and the other audio visual aids," commented Barber.

The money for the school was voted in a 1968 referendum which also included the remodeling of the current high school into a vocational education center. Plans for this remodeling are underway.

The Ypsilanti school district serves 20 square miles including the city of Ypsilanti and parts of Superior and Ypsilanti Township and the student population is divided about 50-50 between the townships and the city. All students living more than one and a half miles from school will be bussed to the school.

"The teachers in each department share an office which they may divide or not divide as they wish. We hope that this will create more interchange of ideas and give each teacher a chance to use his special abilities to the greatest extent possible," explained Barber.

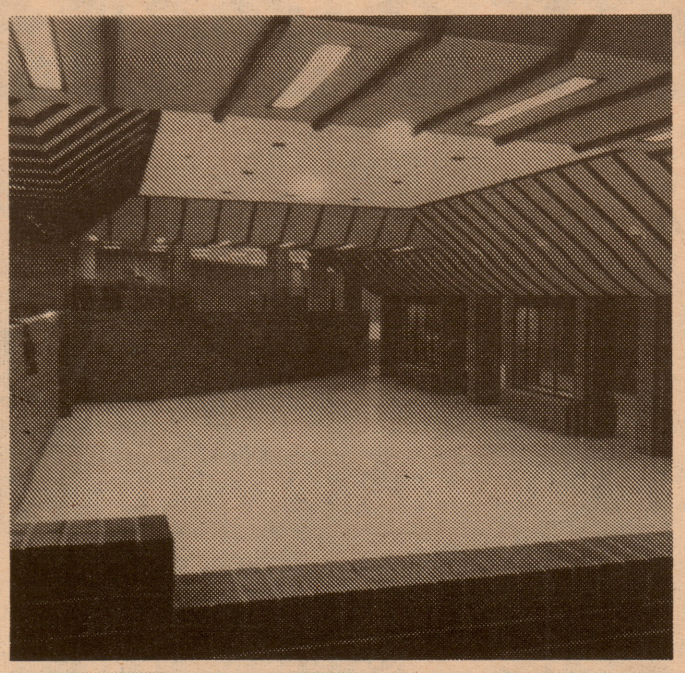
"In our schools," continued Barber, "we want to take the student and help him to reach his goal within the framework of society. We want to teach by prescription rather than by the shotgun method. With each student receiving special attention to help him along."

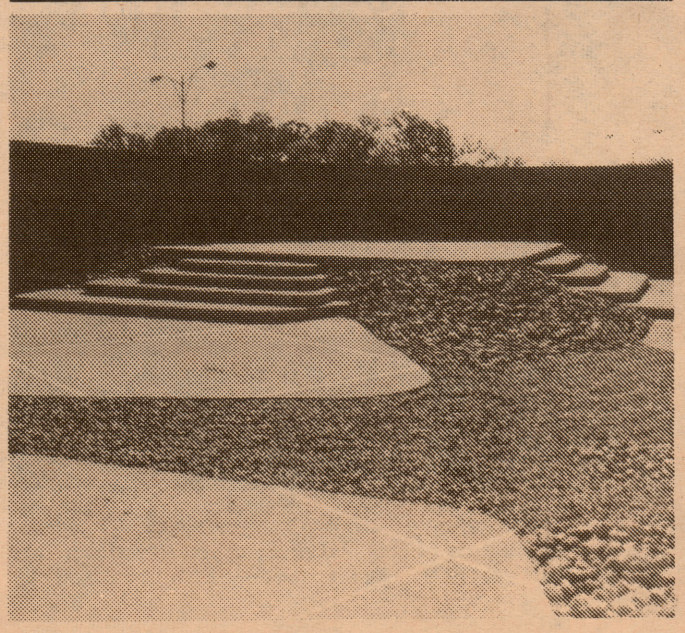
It is a part of Barber's theory that students learn most by doing and that all people--students and others--are involved in their own destiny and the way to reach it should be free and open.

To reach this goal, the high school has a Student Service center rather than the more traditional guidance center. There are guidance counselors available, but they are aided by others with specific expertise to help the student gain a rounded picture of his future aims in life.

Some of the specifics included in the planning of the school are: controlled climate conditioning, non-instructional space held to a minimum, tiered seating with student response system in the large group lecture module, five student dining rooms which convert to serve as student commons, dance floor and meeting rooms, and limited access design for public use of pool and theatre during non-school hours.

The school features extensive radio-frequency television distribution system to most instructional areas and large screen television projection system in the large group lecture module.





The learning center (Library to another generation of students) has a capacity for 360 students with extensive carrel space for individual study, and automated study systems.

It is a new school today, but designed with the students of tomorrow in mind.

New program for children at Ypsi library

"This summer we're trying something new and different in the way of children's summer programs," stated Ms. Leslie Coleman, children's librarian at the Ypsilanti Area Public Library.

"The children will meet each Thursday afternoon to discuss a different country. We will have guests who are either natives of the country or who have visited it recently. The guests will describe the country and its customs to the children. There will be films, demonstrations and representative music to enliven the programs.

"In addition, the library staff will prepare an exhibit of books, pamphlets and records which the children may check out."

Children in grades one through three will gather at 3 p.m. at the library.

Pre-registration is necessary and will be conducted at the main library June 25-29. The program begins July 5.

Speakers include Ms. Nicholas Stamos who will discuss Greece; Ms. William Shaw and Ms. Ed Green, Israel; Ms. Anil DeSai, India and Ms. Don Hudson, Japan. Ms. Charles Hall is working with Ms. Coleman on this program.

Each session will last about 45 minutes.

HELENE ALLMENDINGER:

the singer is gone, but not the song

The passing of Helene Allmendinger last week at the venerable age of 95 deprives life in Ann Arbor of a measure of its sweetness.

Miss Allmendinger lived in other places in America and Europe for over half a century, but this town was home for her. She was born here, visited often, and-homesick-returned to spend her last years in "dear little Ann Arbor."

Her life spanned most of the history of the town, and she retained a sharp memory of people events of past years. Some of her favorite stories have been recorded on tape, enriching our community's fund of oral history. These memories will never grow dim.

Helene Allmendinger was born a long time ago, on May 8, 1878, one of thirteen children of David Frederick and Marie Gaertner Allmendinger. She was a month old when the first train on the Toledo and Ann Arbor Railroad rolled into town, a year old when the first telephone was installed in Ann Arbor. She was three when President Garfield was shot by Charles J. Guiteau, whose father had been a respected Ann Arbor merchant. Our town didn't have waterworks until 1885, when little Helene was seven.

FISH IN THE FAUCET

"They got the water from the Huron River," she recalled. One day I turned on the water. A minnow this big came out. So you know what tasty water we had."

The little girl showed early the gift of song that was to shape her life, leading her into a career as a teacher and a performer in churches and concert halls across the land. She found it more natural to sing to her mother than to speak. Her grandmother, impatient, would ask, "Why must you sing? Can't you talk German yet?"

In fact, German was the only language she could talk, until she left the local German school and started in "English school" at age eight. "I had to learn English that way, because at home we always spoke German." Her parents, like many other immigrants, had tried to preserve the native tongue, the key and safeguard of their religious tradition.

Helene went out into the world, but she kept the faith. She lived alone, but never far from God. "Do you trust in the Lord?" she would ask an acquaintance. She knew that her rich singing voice was not hers alone, but an instrument to glorify her Maker.

Musical gifts and religious faith had been combined also in her grandfather, G. F. Gaertner. Gaertner fashioned pipe and reed organs by hand on West Liberty Street, in a "factory" whose solemn stained-glass windows bespoke the product of his careful craftsmanship.

Son-in-law David continued making organs when Gaertner retired, starting the Ann Arbor Organ Company in 1872 in an upstairs room of the Allmendinger house on the northwest corner of First and West Washington streets. His first organ had gone to the Lutheran school, where it remained for twenty-five years.

"When father made it, he couldn't get any ivories for the keys, so he carved 'ivory' out of beef bones. Of course, that didn't wear as well as ivory would wear."

MICE IN THE MUSIC

David Allmendinger eventually got the little organ back, and the story of its return was one of his daughter's favorite anecdotes. The German school was in the home of Teacher Fischer. So was a lively colony of mice, which would frequently run up through the hole above the pedals to chew on the leather bellows inside the instrument.

"Day after day, many times each week, Teacher Fischer would say, 'Helene, tell your father to come. The mice have been in the organ again.' Father had to do that so many times, he was getting tired of it. He finally siad, 'Tell Teacher Fischer, if he lets me have the old organ, I'll bring him a new one.' "

Helene Allmendinger, '01, was recognized as the oldest graduate of Eastern Michigan University in attendance on Alumni May 20, 1972. [Photo courtesy EMU Information Services.]

The bargain was struck, and a beautiful new organ was delivered to the school. Little Helene watched, eagerly, as Teacher Fischer played on it for the first time. "He started to play, and all of a sudden tears came flowing from his eyes." After years of service, the keys of the old organ "had become very soft and easy to press down. This new one had real ivory keys, and they were very stiff, because it was very new. He had to press down so hard, and his hands must have hurt him terribly.

"So when we got through singing, he said, 'Tell your father that I would like to have my old organ back again.' I told father. He said, 'He can't have the old organ back. He's going to keep that new organ.' So he had to learn to play on it."

The historic old organ was given to Helene, but while she was living in Cleveland, it got sent to Seattle, where it is now in the keeping of another David Frederick Allmendinger, the great-grandson of its builder. Mice no longer gnaw on its innards; Helene's father invented a closure for the space above the pedals, which drops into place when the instrument is not in service. Its use in his newer organs eliminated his visits to Teacher Fischer, and gave him more time for work.

The business grew rapidly, and the family had to relocate to let a factory building go up where the house had been. They moved to a big house farther west on Washington Street, which had been newly extended past the railroad tracks. Allen's Creek flowed on the surface then, so the low area was swampy.

A WALK IN THE AIR

"They built the street out, and then they built wooden sidewalks out. Allen's Creek ran around a little hill, and that was what made it all soggy. The sidewalk had to go up over this hill. It was all wooden sidewalk, with railings on each side. It was about sixteen feet up in the air, so that was something interesting to walk on!"

Deprived of schooling for two terms when the Panic of 1893 slashed the income of the Organ Works, Helene finally borrowed money for books from a sister, and was able to regain the privilege she prized so dearly. In 1899, she graduated from Ann Arbor High School, then spent two years at the Normal School in Ypsilanti, earning a teaching certificate.

Meanwhile, her father's business had rebounded. Helene's voice training with teacher Pauline Kempf revealed a contralto of great promise. She continued with a Chicago master who taught her how to breathe--way down inside. (In recent years, when friends urged her to forsake her apartment on the third floor of an old house on State Street, she brushed aside their concern: the long flights of stairs were no obstacle to one who had learned to breathe!).

Then her father sent her to Europe for more years of study. She was in Paris for nearly three years, in Cologne and Berlin. Just as she was preparing to return, Richard Wagner invited her to sing at Bayreuth. Helene hesitated, then declined. She had just enough money to get home.

She had a brief fling at Wagnerian opera, but rejected it for concert, choir, and studio work. Her appearances on the stage brought her many applications from private pupils. and teaching them was the work she loved best. She opened a studio in Cleveland.

The new Hill Auditorium in Ann Arbor was finished in 1913. Helene was in town at Christmas for the holidays, and was invited to participate in something new -- a community Christmas Sing. "I didn't know what it was going to be at all. Professor Stanley and I were the only performers, and that great big stage was a forest of evergreen trees. No colors, no bubbles, no lights, nothing of that sort. I was singing in a great big forest. This was the most wonderful experience!

"Then I got away from Ann Arbor, and wasn't connected with it in any way, until the fiftieth annivesary, back in 1963." Invited to participate, Miss Allmendinger claimed she couldn't sing in public anymore. "If I sing, something gets in my throat, and then I just squeak. But she didn't refuse point-blank. "I prayed about it that day, and just put it up to the Lord. I said, 'After all, its Your voice and my instrument, and if You want to use my instrument, it's all right with me.'"

The historic evening arrived, and she did sing -- a solo of "Stille Nacht." "I felt so funny up here. I didn't know what was wrong. I was singing soprano! For the first time in my life! And then I realized it wasn't my voice, you see -- it was my instrument.

"And that night, they said, there were about five thousand people in Hill Auditorium. They said every foot of space on the floor was occupied. All the stairs were full of people. I couldn't see them, because they had that light in my eyes. But the applause almost tore the building down, it was so terriffic. That was really the end of my career, and a big end it was."

Helene Allmendinger's career can never really end as long as her accomplishments and her personality -- bright, optimistic, independent -- are held in the memory of those who knew her. Ann Arbor has a remarkable tradition of great women who have brought distinction to the community through their service and their gifts. Miss Allmendinger was one of these. If there are choirs in heaven, she sings with the angels today.

The Ann Arbor Organ Company, later the Ann Arbor Piano Company, occupied the factory on South First Street until 1915. Helene Allmendinger was born in the house that stood here before the factory was built. The factory building, greatly enlarged since this photograph was made in 1896, today houses offices of the University of Michigan, but old Allmendinger organs are still in use in cities around the United States.

"One-Five-O" to highlight Sesquicentennial events

Ypsilanti "ONE-FIVE-O" is the biggest event of the full calendar--June 30th through July 8th, 1973. There will be five nightly performances at 8:30 P.M. beginning July 3rd Tuesday and also running Thursday-Friday-Saturday-Sunday, July 5, 6, 7, 8, 1973.

Ypsilanti "ONE-FIVE-O" will be a historical spectacular with a cast of 523 local people under the direction of Edward H. Horner Jr., of the John B. Rogers Producing Company, the world's largest producers of outdoor pageantry. Ypsilanti "ONE-FIVE-O" will dramatize the past and projected history. This great spectacular will be presented on a seven multi-leveled stage encompassing most of the Shadford Field area; 225 lineal feet and as high as 28 feet. It will combine drama, music, comedy and FIVE dance production numbers, pictorial rear view slide projection, films, and special lighting effects in a magnificent total theatrical experience.

Ed Horner leading teens in practice session for Episode Twelve: "The New Age." The dance, featuring youngsters from Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor, will be one of "One-Five-O" performances.

All of the historical greats of our heritage will appear form out of the past in appropriate and colorful costumes - The Chippewa, Potawatomi, Ottawa and Wyandot Indians, the early settlers; De La Salle, LaViolette, Collin and Dubray. "Godfroy's on the Potawatomie Trail". The Woodruffs, Grants, Tuttles, Rogers, Johnsons. Dignitaries, statesmen, dandies and belles, World War Soldiers, and the Flivers and Flappers of the Roaring Twenties. The living history of the Ypsilanti Area and the State of Michigan will be presented in 12 fast moving Episodes containg a pioneer Hoe-down the first schools, Eastern Michigan University, first churches, the Charleston and even a wild teen dance of today and much more. Ypsilanti "ONE-FIVE-O" presents a progress of medieval pageantry centered around the Sesquicentennial Queen and her court of Princesses. This royal group will be surrounded by attendants, marching groups, and many other colorful patriotic ensembles.

The production profesisonally produced is the highlight of the Ypsilanti Area Sesquicentennial Celebration. The big commemorative show will be a production remembered for years to come.

Some 523 people will appear in the show. There are no lines to memorize, and rehearsals are short and interesting. Eight narrators will tell the story of the highlights of the Ypsilanti Area.

Information may be obtained at the Ypsilanti Area Sesquicentennial Headquarters - Sesquicentennial Hall, 130 N. Huron St.

Substitute teaching

than others. Spring fever hits teachers and students and substitutes have to deal with this.

The students themselves are always interesting whether they are easy to control or not. It didn't take me long to realize that they are very creative in trying to dupe innocent subs. I have rarely had a class in which someone hasn't told me that his regular teacher lets them leave class to watch a movie in the auditorium, leave class five minutes early or some other such thing. And they say it with such honest faces.

One class stands out in my mind as being the most interesting. It was a black studies class in which only three students showed up and only eight were in the attendance book. I wish there were more people who took the class. The kids in the class weren't known as bright students, but they were all very sharp, more so than many of the "good" students I have encountered.

We discussed many topics in an hour. They talked of their experiences and related them to issues that blacks and whites have been arguing over for a long time. Their honesty, openness and frankness was a refreshing change from the humdrum life of movies, textbooks and worksheets that are the main tools of the substitute to keep the class busy. I learned a lot from those three kids.

Despite the variety of every subbing assignment I am struck by one common feeling I get after finishing each one--that most of the students are bored and unexcited about schoolwork and that it shouldn't be this way. This makes subbing difficult because students usually need busy work to keep them occupied and this doesn't always work. It makes me realize that regular teachers must be very hard put to come up with interesting things to teach day after day. The book "What Do I do Monday?" describes this problem perfectly.

Substitute teachers get a great perspective on education in the total school system. You learn the ins and outs of many classrooms and buildings rather than just one. It might help tachers who are in a rut to sub in other buildings or subjects once in a while. It may even be good for administrators to sub once in a while. They may learn something they don't know or have forgotten.

FOR THE PRICE OF SOMETHING SMALL AND UGLY, YOU CAN DRIVE SOMETHING SMALL AND BEAUTIFUL.

If you've been looking around for a small inexpensive car and you're somewhat disheartened, we suggest you look at the Fiat 850 Spider.

With a price tag of $2739* the Fiat 850 Spider not only qualifies as an inexpensive small car, it qualifies as the lowest priced true sports car in America.

And if it doesn't look like the lowest priced true sports car in America, that's because it was designed by the same Nuccio Bertone who designs $20,000 Lamborghinis and Maseratis.

Looks, however, aren't the only thing the Fiat 850 Spider has in common with sports cars costing considerably more.

Have you ever tried to shoehorn yourself into a small sports car? According to the experts at Road & Track magazine, the 850's interior is "near flawless, the seats comfortable, and the driving position excellent."

Have you ever fumbled with an uncooperative convertible top? Ours is a new design you can actually raise or lower one-handed while sitting down in front.

Did your last sports car ride remind you of a toboggan slide down a washboard? You should appreciate our merciful rear independent suspension.

And when it comes to performance, you should also appreciate the 850's front disc brakes and standard radial tires (usually a $100 option). Not to mention its sophisticated engine that zips through a four-speed fully-synchro-meshed gearbox to redline at 6900 rpm.

In view of all this, the devotees of Car and Driver magazine have elected the Fiat 850 Spider the best sports car in its class for two years running.

And we find that even more impressive than winning a beauty contest.
